- When a confirmed COVID-19 case attends a venue while possibly infectious, NSW Health carries out a risk assessment on that venue to determine whether there is a public health risk.
- NSW Health alerts the public as quickly as possible when there is a venue deemed a public health risk.
- They now do not alert the public of venues if they have obtained a list of people, potentially exposed to the virus, through the venue or other records.
- Potentially exposed people identified through these records receive an SMS message from NSW Health advising them to immediately get tested and self-isolate until they receive further advice from contact tracers.
